When There Is No Wind, Row tells the story about the remarkable career path the author traveled to become a lawyer. When she began that journey in the 1960s, social and cultural barriers were high - women were supposed to become wives and mothers not lawyers - forcing her to tack to different careers. She faced financial barriers as well. The author tells about growing up poor in the 1950s in Kennebunk, Maine. When she left for college, scholarship awards and a student loan with savings from her summer jobs didn't cover her first-year college costs. But she made it, graduating Phi Beta Kappa in 1966, even though married and supporting her widowed mother by her junior year.Her plans for law school were thwarted by the lack of financial aid for women for professional schools. When she began her job search in Boston, want ads were segregated by gender. She landed interviews for "male" jobs through an employment agent who failed to disclose she was female. The first interviewer refused to see her and, at her next interview, she was made to wait for seven hours. She finally landed a job as computer programmer at an insurance company even though she didn't know what a computer was. Her qualification for the job - she could play bridge! At age 30, the author left her computer career for law school - student aid for women had become available with passage of Title IX of the Civil Rights Act. The barriers for entry into the legal profession in Boston for a lawyer with her unusual "credentials" - female, mid-30s, married, a mother, a public school education and a prior career - were too high to overcome. She tacked to a unique job with the consulting firm, Arthur D. Little, Inc. supporting the company's international projects at the outset of economic globalization. At age 40, she finally began practicing law, building up an international tax practice well before fax, email and the Internet. At age 50, she parlayed her career experiences to found a successful tax software company with her husband.

Case studies are used throughout to highlight important issues, from developments in the aviation industry to the rise of working holidays.
