Worm is essentially a massive first draft, a monster of a story written by a growing Wildbow. Some chapters are polished and well paced while others suffer from the stressors of the author's day to day life: This is not a story for those who cannot handle the odd typo, flat dialogue or confusing prose.

Pact has the pacing issue in spades, Worm has it to a degree, and Twig suffers a lot due to its unending biological horror. Strong Points of Wildbow's Writing (These are, of course, personal appreciations based on my personal writing preferences and what I enjoy reading.) Above all else, consistency.

~~What's the opinion on Wildbow's writing outside the fandom ...~~

I'm 'Wildbow', and I write web serials, putting chapters online every Tuesday and Saturday, and some Thursdays too, if and when funding hits certain benchmarks. I wrote Worm, Worm's sequel Ward, Pact, and Twig. I'm currently working on Pale, a shorter serial. It's part of a series of (somewhat) shorter, more experimental works I'm doing.
